Fisher is just plain talented. I have to be careful whenever I pose challenging questions to his calculus class, because (with a little prompting) he will take over. He pulls out his mathematics skills and naturally and fluently puts them to work. However, just when I think he is about to wrap up his explanation, he may step back from the screen, turn and look at me, and ask a very thoughtful and insightful question, to which I likely do not know the answer. Many times I have played the wise teacher who responds with something like, “That’s a great question, what do you guys think?” while my brain scrambles and tries to come up with something intelligent to say. I am relieved to say that on most of these occasions, Fisher and his peers come to my rescue and develop their own answers. Fisher, I am honored to be your teacher.
